Vern read a note he’d gotten from a veteran friend. The story went that he had been assigned to speak to a World War II veteran about their experience while a high school student. Since his father had been in the war he asked him a few questions. Then he asked his “real question.” Did you ever kill anyone? His father fumbled for an answer but finally said, “Ya, probably. … I was the cook.”

Peter reported on the Citizens’ Climate Lobby currently active in Washington, D.C. lobbying all the national legislators.

Mike M. moved to adjourn, seconded by Penny, and passed.
